"They sometimes sweep up the dirt in heaps, but they don't take it away, and it is left to scatter again.

"When they do take it away they leave more than they take. You see, they have swept the street this very day, but there is still enough loose dirt of every kind scattered in the road to be a disgrace to any city "And look at the heaps that they have

"That collection under the big truck opposite is different. The wagon has stood there continuously for five or six months. It ts a Winter wagon, not in use now, and the tin can and rotten vegetation under it have been all that time accumulating. The they lie there till kingdom come."

But Citizen Millioen reckoned without his host. Somebody in the Street-Cleaning Department had evidently seen the reporter aking notes and the artist crawing sketches of the city's disgrace, for an hour later when they returned to the scene some one had been there before them, and the omnium gatherum under the big truck had been hoed out and made into a nice little mound and two blue

Ever and anon the cartmen would steal sly glances over their shoulders at the two inoffensive citizens who lounged in a doorway and chatted quietly with Citizen Millioen, who had come out at their call.

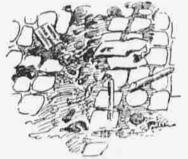

One after another the little mounds were dovelled into the blue carts, and Millioen declared that he had never seen the work done so thoroughly before, though the site of every mound was marked after the shoveller had left it by fragments of paper, bits or melon, decayed fruit, a tin can or some other noisome

But he left it of the cleaners.

The blue cartr even got the old basket, the broken wash boiler, the bursted demijohn, the old shoes and what not under the red cider wagon-an unheard of thing in streetcleaning in that section.

And, with a parting glare at the newspaper men over their shoulders, the carters drove off down First avenue.

Then a fresh survey of the block was taken and the artist made the truthful picture o the freshly cleaned (?) street.

"Now, I made all these dresses myself, and it is a queer thing that not a dress belonging to anybody else in the house was even disturbed. My sister Louise's clothes hang in the same closet with mine, and hers, were not harmed a bit.

ment windows to do that, and I sat at the window all the afternoon. I was in my room only an hour before the dresses were found destroyed.

On the floor of the room I picked up this note, which was in the same handwriting as the letters Smith used to send to me:

"SHORTY: I don't believe you better do it. Resays he will break your back it you touch anything of hers; so if you want to do it without his help I aint with you.

"Now, Smith used to go under the name of Van Renseiner at one time, and the Shorty referred to, I think, is a short man, with a red spot on the back of his neck, who used to go by the windows and smile herridly at me."

That is the girl's queer yarn. Her mother believes every word of it. The police are in a quandary. When the Sergeant in charge heard her take about seeing a man in a comin decad, and then meeting him full of life and activity two weeks later, he scratched his head and said laconically:

ALDERMEN CANNOT OUST THE L Park Board Asked to Revoke the License as to Battery Park. An opinion by Corporation Counsel Clark to the effect that jurisdiction in the matter of the occupancy of Battery Park by the Elevated Hallroad was vested wholly in the Park Department was read at to-day's meeting of the Board of Aldermen and placed on file.

The opinion is based, like that of Corporation Counsel W. C. Whitney in 1875, upon section 6, chapter 280, of the Laws of 1871, which took away the control from the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty.

Mr. Clark decides that the only manner in which the railroad can be ousted from the park is by revocation, upon six months'
notice, of the license granted by the Park Board in 1876. vated Railroad was vested wholly in the Park
